COMMENTARY

SUPPLY REMAINS BROAD AS INVESTORS STAY SELECTIVE

May was an active month for the Australian securitisation market, with eleven RMBS and ABS transactions totalling approximately A$8.8bn. Issuance was broad across both bank and non-bank originators, including prime RMBS transactions from ANZ's Kingfisher programme, AMP's Progress programme and non-bank lender BC Invest.

The depth of primary activity highlights continued access to funding markets, although investor engagement remained selective. Transaction outcomes were supported by participation from domestic real-money accounts and offshore investors, with relative value, structure and collateral quality continuing to drive demand.

Following a strong primary market calendar, activity would typically moderate through the coming period as seasonal factors take effect. Many Australian issuers attended the Global ABS conference in Barcelona in June, while offshore investor participation and post-conference deal flow often slows into the Northern Hemisphere summer period.

HIGHER RATES SHIFT THE FOCUS TO BORROWER RESILIENCE

The domestic backdrop continued to tighten through May, with the RBA increasing the cash rate to 4.35%. At the same time, housing conditions became more mixed, with national dwelling values broadly flat through the month and weakness in Sydney and Melbourne offset by continued gains in some smaller capital cities[a].

This environment keeps borrower resilience in focus. Arrears remain low across the system, supported by employment conditions, borrower equity and conservative lending standards[b]. However, higher rates and cost-of-living pressures are likely to increase dispersion across borrower cohorts over the second half of the year.

For Gryphon, the focus remains on identifying where that dispersion is most likely to emerge. Portfolio surveillance continues to emphasise borrower type, loan vintage, repayment behaviour, collateral quality and geographic exposure, rather than relying on broad market averages.

STRUCTURE AND COLLATERAL QUALITY MATTER AS DISPERSION INCREASES

Against the current Federal Budget policy backdrop, investor behaviour and credit demand are likely to become more differentiated over time. However, for RMBS credit performance, borrower serviceability and cash-flow pressure remain the more immediate arrears drivers, particularly given the prospective nature of the reforms and the grandfathering of existing arrangements.

As housing conditions become more varied across regions and borrower cohorts, the assessment shifts from broad house price direction to the specialist investor's granular view of each transaction. Borrower equity, loan-to-value ratios, excess spread, credit enhancement and subordination remain central to assessing expected loss outcomes.

In an environment where issuance remains active but borrower and collateral performance may become more differentiated, disciplined security selection remains critical. Gryphon continues to assess each transaction on its underlying collateral, structural protections and relative value, with portfolio construction focused on sustainable monthly income and capital preservation.
